About The National Electronics Industry HOF

The National Electronics Industry Hall of Fame was established in 1969 in Nebraska by members of the National Electronic Associations Inc. (NEA). The purpose was to honor individuals who made outstanding contributions to the electronics industry, or who served as inspiring examples for others to follow. In 1973, NEA became the National Electronics Service Dealers Association (NESDA) and later encompassed the National Association of Television and Electronics Services of America (NATESA). After being nurtured by NESDA for 14 years, the Hall of Fame was established in 1983 as an independent non-profit corporation, first in Texas, and then in New York. In 2002, The NEIHOF was reinstated as a function of NESDA in Fort Worth TX.

The Hall of Fame is made up of six divisions:

- (1) Scientists, Inventors & Engineers*
- (2) Business and Industry*
- (3) Communications*
- (4) Association Executives*
- (5) Industry Association Members*
- (6) Outstanding Individuals who do not clearly fit into any of the other groups*

Individuals who will be considered for induction into the Electronics Industry Hall of Fame if that person has:

- 1. Significantly contributed to the advancement of technology in the electronics industry*
- 2. Significantly contributed to the development of our industry for the benefit of mankind*
- 3. Significantly contributed to the improvement of conditions in the industry*
- 4. Substantially upgraded the status of his or her segment of the electronics industry, or the industry as a whole*
- 5. Through long, distinguished, and dedicated service, helped to promote and upgrade the electronics industry*
- 6. Demonstrated a helpful interest in his or her fellow man through positive activities as a representative of the industry*
